For instance, given 'foo', if I had a list of strings: foo = ['abc', 'test', 'abc'] I would like to get the index of 'abc' such that it would return 1. A: Use enumerate(), more or less: foo = ['abc', 'test', 'abc'] for index, item in enumerate(foo): if 'abc' == item: # do something with index A: you can use index. >>> foo = ['abc', 'test', 'abc'] >>> idx = foo.index("abc") >>> idx 1 >>> foo[idx] 'abc' A: You can use the list.index() function to get the index of a string in a list: foo = ['abc', 'test', 'abc'] for index in foo: if 'abc' in foo: print(index) Q: How to access the index of a numpy array from within a loop? I have a very simple numpy array that I want to index from within a while loop. I have tried using enumerate but it ends up indexing the arrays elements by index not by their corresponding position within the array. See below example: import numpy as np dims = [2, 3] x f678ea9f9e
