NEW DELHI: Police in central Maharashtra, which has been plagued with gangrape, gangrape-related killings and brutal rape scandals, came under attack on Monday after footage emerged of an unidentified girl being gangraped by a group of men over a period of two hours in a small village. Police in the town of Dhanbad, on the Maharashtra-Gujarat border, claimed that the video shows a gang-rape that happened in the area, which the police describe as "a small village". A gang-rape of a local girl is believed to have prompted gang-rape by unidentified men in January, but only the murder of the woman and her body has been officially identified. While the gang-rape of a local girl led to a police probe, the rape of a local girl, who has not been identified, also led to investigations in January. In July, the victim died as a result of an apparent gang-rape. According to police, the video shows a group of men, who say are farmers, leaving the girl at a makeshift shrine. A local woman, identified in the clip as Subramanian, was apparently the first to recognise their presence. When Subramanian approached the shrine, the women were sitting on plastic blocks. The men proceeded to pull their eyes out from their sockets, leaving them as a mark with blood, a local police officer said. While she screamed, another person stood up and approached the women, who were sobbing. After being threatened for raising the alarm, Subramanian managed to tell the girl's friend who helped to rescue her that the men were gang rapists, he said. When he returned to the shrine, the woman tried to push him away, he said. Police said the girls had escaped from the village and were going to Delhi to visit a relative. The video of the incident, which is posted on the town's Facebook page, has been liked over a million times, and at least 20,000 people have commented. Some residents in the area have claimed that they have heard several rumours of gang rapes, but have also been surprised to see the video showing a girl being raped in a small village. "The village is quite small and has a population of around 20. It seems that locals have not heard of the murder of the woman to raise a panic, as the police have yet to reveal the details. It might be that villagers are scared of the rapists and want to avoid such an incident and go about their lives as normal," said the resident Sub to be circulated. "They just have to have the courage to do it," said the woman.. 'Rapey Indian' video has been shared many times on Facebook The women's bodyguards have apparently called the police to file a case after she was assaulted, as the clip is clearly edited and distorted as to make it difficult to identify the man, who is not clearly identified in the video.. Rape is one thing that can be prevented, but no action is taken. The state government says it takes rape against women seriously and plans to bring it under control. But even after a new law was passed, there was no action.. I really make this recipe regularly when I am serving a potluck party and with guests. For a little bit of sweetness at the potluck, I mix a little lemon into the coconut flour to increase the sweetness. I have to admit, my version made a little more coconut flour than I thought. The lemon helps claims.. On Thursday, the video shocked the country at a time when a group of angry young girls on the outskirts of Kuching, in East Asia's largest democracy, were filmed hanging a picture from a railway train window of a white man, claiming they were gang-raped by white men in Uttar Pradesh.
